Microsoft says it will get up to five hours of use, which is a huge improvement. You can also use the USB-C power adapter to charge it, which will last about two hours. Unfortunately, that means it'll be impossible to charge with a micro-USB cable, so you'll need to buy a Surface charger if you want to go with that option. You can also pair the Surface Pro 4 to an external keyboard using Bluetooth. This lets you use the device as a 2-in-1 PC, or use the keyboard to get more work done. Unfortunately, the keyboard isn't quite as good as the previous generation. The spacing and size of the keys are slightly different, and there's no touch-type functionality. I tried to work on the device with it, but it just wasn't as comfortable. I found myself constantly swapping between using
