- Nov-27-13 6:23 PM 1 This info has been compiled and updated from the forums and as best we can determine from a technical point of view. To sum up it is a continuous distribution pad that goes on both sides of the tank. There are assorted technologies and methods that were used. There was a patent awarded for the concept. It is referred to in tank pictures as a "penatiary hybrid" or a "tank skin" or "Tanko-tape". Not many have seen it in person. It's been shown in published patent applications in 2011 by Hanson and then again in 2013 by Tanks International. The specific notes or official disclosure of the patents don't exist. We are not sure why companies that have been using the technology have not "officially" released those patents yet. The data, schematics, that we have seen all point to the basic concept as a full compartment or wrap but with a difference. The technology works inside and outside the compressor. We are not being vague, we are trying to locate physical embodiments because this design is being marketed and sold. There is no competitor to this compound on the market. Makes no sense unless you are licensed to use the specific technique that works like it does.

Really enjoyed this one. I wasn't that impressed with the previous 2 games in the series but aced this one from start to finish. I had never played an Hidden Object game but was sucked into this one from the opening level. Having a little problem with the game though. I'm getting my rpg and now I can't find my book to start it, I know it's under the couch but it's really aggravating me right now. SORRY YA! Anyway apart from that it's a nice game. Well worth getting. Mysterious going on at Pontoon Laboratories
